

Krystel Romero's Transition Story

Looking back at my life, I can say it's been quite a journey. I've experienced a life of unlimited abundance in a period of my childhood. But then again, I had the opportunity to live a reality full of scarcity. Two sides of life that transformed my life. It made me understand the importance of money. When you don't have any, it's almost like you don't have oxygen. But at the same time, you can't allow yourself to get in a position where money rules your life.

When I graduated from college, my family was going through a tough financial situation. I had no other choice but to be excellent and excel in my new job. Having a great job and being part of something bigger than me was something I really enjoyed.

Soon I got married and had my first son. Unexpected feelings started to flourish. Having a family triggered something in me I'd never felt before. I no longer wanted to spend all my time, attention, and life on my job. I wanted time for my family, my son, and I wanted time for myself too. I started feeling the chains that prevented me from doing the things I wanted to do. I began to feel I was letting money control my life. The fear of losing my paycheck prevented me from doing the things I really wanted to do.

I remember this one time, my son got sick. I had to take him to the hospital. I couldn't go as soon as I needed. I had to finish this "crucial" report at work. I didn't have the permission to take care of my son. I remember feeling so powerless. It was the beginning of a breakthrough for me. When I became pregnant with my second child, I knew time was over. It almost felt like the Universe had given me a deadline to make serious decisions. I made a promise: I would never allow myself to be in that position ever again. So I decided to quit my job.

I won't deny it was a difficult decision. Our financial "security" was at stake and we had no plan B. But honestly, it scared me, even more, the idea of repeating the story once again. Happily, a wonderful opportunity arrived and opened my life to unthinkable opportunities. I decided to start my own online business, work on my own schedule, while taking care of the people I care about most.

It's been an amazing experience. My mission: Help and inspire people to change their lives as I changed mine. I now do what I love and get paid at the same time. I live in peace now that I've decided to act accordingly with what I believe in. Even if those decisions push me out of my comfort zone. Pushing your barriers and limits and opening your life to different opportunities that will bring new and different results in your life is how you grow. That's how you succeed.

If I can be of service to you and help you on your journey, contact me directly at Krystel@happinesswithintention.com or visit my website Happinesswithintention.com. You can also download my free book, Change Your Life, Transform Your Financial Life at <http://join.happinesswithintention.com>.